

ERIZ MORENO

2011 / 2021

STATEMENT

mapping; entropy; history; landscape; culture; society.

In my artistic practice, the projects are related to specific historical-political contexts and their effect on a population or a landscape. In addition, I consider my work as a thought based on the information and archive, intervening in that area using my own experience. This procedure can be described as Korzybski said: "A map is not the territory it represents, just as a word is not the object it represents."

My projects are site-specific, giving a high importance to the field-work and the process. I also have interest in the collaborative work, creating networks between different areas of knowledge. This allows me to approach to the projects joining different points of interest and establishing an open dialogue between the environment and the receiver. This is an aspect that is important to give the tools to generate a debate and reflection leading to different viewpoints offering another approach.

The formats I work with are installation (made of photographs, videos and objects) and publication: I am not a photographer but a sculptor that works with photographs.

INVESTIGATE > COLLECT > NARRATE

The title of the project refers to the title of a sonnet by Percy Bysshe Shelley, published in 1818. Its central theme is the inevitable decline of all leaders and of the empires they build no matter how powerful they were in their time. As happened with Ozymandias (aka Ramses II), in recent history political changes have also occurred where several world powers that were considered indestructible ended up disappearing and only their remains stay.

The public presentation of the project lacks a predefined form, it is about proposals that dialogue between the abstract of concepts such as ruin and crisis, showing their consequences in a physical way.

Until now, the project had connections to monuments and the currency of the Soviet Union, both related to situations that affected millions of people and that, since its fall just 30 years ago, seem forgotten.

Therefore, the objective of #ozymandias is to understand the form and content of the origin that the obtained objects represent, showing the internal tensions of the different territories in which they are carried out, may they be geographical, political, economic or historical. It is a practice that implies a personal positioning as an artist, and that seeks to make visible a specific and characteristic situation that goes unnoticed: the permeable character of the border, the ruins of modernity, the surprisingness of contemporary archaeology or the remains that the structures of the Power have left in the landscape. In short: entropy.

Workers get the official title of honour of Shock worker of Communist Labour

Untitled (BERLIN), consists of a road trip with the objective of visiting and cataloguing with slide photographs all the US communities called "Berlin," thirty in total.

The project looks at the meanings that establish a conceptual connection between different landscapes linked by the same name. This link, which at the start is purely toponymical, makes it possible to connect and establish a relation between very different and geographically remote realities. A link which, having been formally registered and following the same protocol (compositional neutrality of an image, vanishing points, no people, distance to the object, format, etc.), provides us with tools to establish main coordinates on which one can find and analyse other elements of continuity, such as the typical architecture or vehicles of the American Way of Life, that determinates the image of the American landscape. This allows us to think about a territory visually homogeneous despite the big distances that can separate one Berlin to another.

An experience of place: backgrounds without shape, interrupted lives, the "presence" of the absent.

The project is shown with thirty series of 140 slides, a selection of eight pictures from each Berlin are going to be published in Berlin (America) photographic-essay in 2021. During the journey I also recorded a road documentary (digital video, 50 hours) where the road trip –connecting all the Berlin experience is registered.

"In the realization of the project every day it is presented as a road trip observing the landscape that was happening, lending to this experience the attention it deserves, until arriving at the destination. A destination that has been repeated continually, going constantly from Berlin to Berlin, from Berlin to Berlin, etc. ... for 21,394 kilometres."

Berlin (Nevada)

Alabama

Kansas

Massachusetts

Missouri

Georgia

Illinois

Texas

Oregon

Pennsylvania

South Carolina

Virginia

Wisconsin

Projekt Beton [Polish: Project Concrete] consists of exploring and registering the partly abandoned Reichsautobahn [German: Imperial Highway] Berlin-Königsberg between Germany, Poland and Kaliningrad Oblast (Russia).

The construction of the Reichsautobahn began in 1933, making use of the unemployed German workers as a part of the German government's strategy to overcome the consequences of the Great Depression. The highway was intended to connect Germany with its exclave of East Prussia, whose capital was Königsberg. The Polish refusal to cross the "Polish Corridor" was used in 1939 as one of the pretexts for the invasion of Poland. However, due to the turn of the Second World War against Germany, the highway was never fully completed. After the war, the movement of the borders and the lack of investment left the highway as it was in 1945, which caused the unfinished sections to be covered by nature.

Projekt Beton explores the landscape, where each day of the fieldwork is considered as a continuation of a journey along a highway that appears and disappears. It is a search for the image and the movement, in relation to the territory, as a way of traveling and looking. In the project, the camera is used as a means of approach (input) to one of the original ideas of the Reichsautobahnen: to show the landscape to the people who travelled through them. A transit and, therefore, a landscape that, in the case of the Reichsautobahn Berlin-Königsberg, has been interrupted.

The project has been taking shape over several years. Between 2011 and 2013 the 125 kilometres of the highway, from Szczecin to Barwice where the constructions were left unfinished, were registered. This first phase of the project concluded with a book that shows the complete section, currently covered by nature, through photographs taken every 500 meters and a selection of relevant architectural elements.

In 2017 the view of the route was completed by means of a video that shows the entire highway. Including the finished parts of the highway (Berlin-Szczecin / Elbląg-Kaliningrad), the area that was photographed in the first phase of the project, and the section that remained with isolated or only planned constructions (Barwice-Elbląg). The total duration of the video is 4 hours 51 minutes (97 videos of 3 minutes each, shot every 10 kilometres), this is the same time as the journey from Berlin to Kaliningrad in the case that the highway had been completed (currently it is more than 12 hours).

N53.527788 E15.622545

In yellow, the planned highway on a contemporary map

In the Projekt Beton publication, the part of the highway was the one that was left unfinished in the section that goes from the border of Poland and Germany in Szczecin (km 139) to the now Polish city of Barwice (until 1945 it was part of Germany: Bärwalde).

No. 010

No. 101

No. 129

No. 215

projekt beton

Projekt Beton, 2013
296 pages
226mm x 157mm

English / German / Spanish / Basque / Russian
ISBN: 9788461628018

Projekt Beton
Digital video
4 hours 51 minutes
2017

N53.433208 E15.299530

N53.432284 E14.844353

"The monuments would not be made of marble, granite and gold incised lettering, but modest, and let everything be temporary."

Lenin, 1917.

Year 2019 would be the 70th anniversary of the German Democratic Republic (in German: Deutsche Demokratische Republik - DDR) and it is the celebration of the 30 years of the Peaceful Revolution (in German: Friedliche Revolution). Two anniversaries that bring us back to a very different time and context than today: a division of Germany, as a result of the Second World War, which ended symbolically with the fall of the Berlin Wall, an event that marked the beginning of the end of European socialist regimes.

From these ephemeris began the project titled Werk der Millionen / Fest der Millionen (from the German: Work of the millions / Party of the millions), based on two of the propaganda publications made in the DDR to celebrate the twentieth anniversary of its foundation in 1969, year that would be the equator of the regime. The analysis and understanding of this publication provides the working material with the aim of decoding the historical discourse, investigating the internal space of the publications and their subsequent passage to the exhibition space, raising a personal view. This view is irrevocably contemporary, but it would be done using archival materials related to the twentieth anniversary of the DDR, a country that still exists in terms like Ostalgia.

Fest der Millionen book prologue:

"In the third decade of the German Democratic Republic we are driven by large tasks, audacious projects, with long-term goals. A great deal has been achieved. There is still a great deal to be done to develop the socialist society in all areas.

The XX anniversary of this state is always a good reminder and stimulus on this arduous path. The German Democratic Republic was formed on 7 October 1949. On 7 October 1969, it was clear to everybody that the German peasant and worker state was resolutely continuing with its successful development."

FEST DER MILLIONEN

WERK DER MILLIONEN

ICH BIN 20

Petra Barthel. Offset 81.9 X 56.8 cm
Committee for the 20th anniversary of the German Democratic Republic
Design: Kratz. Printing: Ostseedruck Rostock. 1969
Stadtgeschichtliches Museum Leipzig

XX

DDR

* in cooperation with Mandy Gehrt

On this project, we propose a revision and a comparison of the content of the so-called women's magazines and publications printed from 1960 to the mid 1980's in different cultural environments (until now, we could research Austria, the German Democratic Republic, Spain and Yugoslavia).

Historically, periodicals were (and are) used as a means to legitimise the political orientation towards the interior of the nation and its presentation to the outside world. On these periodicals, the representation of everyday life together with a certain ideology was something that the population was accustomed to and only with the distance that time gives us, we become aware of its nature.

In past and existing social systems, the ideologically coloured representation of the reality of life as well as the public given image of their society is an effective means of the political regime or the current government to legitimize the respective political orientation internally and to present it externally.

The objective of our project is to carry out an analysis of magazines from the same period in a relationship with their different socio-political contexts, a research of the past of our societies, extract the differences and similarities found in the photographs and texts to present to the public an example of the life of the previous generations and, in this way, open a dialogue about the ways, if any, the past is reflected in our time.

Countries reaserched untill now:
Austria, Spain, German Democratic Republic, Yugoslavia.

MODA MAESTRAS

El colegio de las Madres Teresianas es alegre y moderno. Sencilla, cómoda, inarrugable, la profesora toma el sol en el recreo. Lleva blusa y falda de tergal que entonan perfectamente con los zapatos de gamuza marrón. Los corchetes que cierran la costura del pliegue delantero dan originalidad a la falda. Un estilo deportivo que siempre sienta bien, que nunca cansa. (Falda, 475; blusa, 519; zapatos, 295; pañuelo, 29; pendientes, 15; pulsera, 7 pesetas. ¿Quién no se anima?)

Welt der Mode 1968

Welt der Mode 1968

Welt der
Mode 1968

DIE FRAUEN MIT DEM FLÜGELRAD

Welt der Mode 1968

LA COCINA
MAS
FEMENINA...

FAR

La marca FAR es la marca emblemática de la industria del hogar en Argentina. Una de las pocas marcas que hoy día sigue siendo una referencia en el campo de la cocina. Far es sinónimo de calidad, de diseño, de durabilidad y de innovación.

Far es una marca registrada por la Sociedad Potosina Industrial de Argentina S.A.E. Una marca comprometida con la calidad y la innovación.

La mejor cocina para la mejor casa.

DISTRIBUIDOR TECNICO Y REPARADOR DE MATERIALES DE CONSTRUCCION, SRL DE CV - TELÉFONO 0100-1000

Malo gimnastika

SAMO ZA
ISTRAJNE

• SECRETARIAS ULTIMA MODA •

Secretaria para Oficinas para una Oficina moderna. Proyecto de interiorismo. La secretaria con Oficina a medida de su medida.

Frau und Mutter

50. Jahrgang

Zweites Märzheft 1961

Einzelheft S 4.80 DM -.- Lire 140

Zwölftäglich erscheint. Zettelgeld

Gebeten durch Buchdruckerei
in Zeitschriften-Vertrieb
KREIMAYR & SCHERLAU
Wien VII. Butekasse 47
Telephone 445671

„Strickmode, Wäsche, Handarbeit“
mit vollständiger Arbeitsanleitung
„Das behagliche Heim“
„Für die Landfrau“ „Kinderwelt“

* in cooperation with Amaia Molinet

With its 151 kilometers of curves, the Drumul Național 7C road (aka Transfăgărășan) is perhaps the most emblematic of Romania. It was built between 1970 and 1974 during the mandate of Nicolae Ceaușescu, in response to the 1968 invasion of Czechoslovakia by the Soviet Union. Thus, it was conceived as a strategic military route, connecting the historic regions of Transylvania (in the north) and Wallachia (in the south) as it passed through the higher sections of the southern Carpathians. The road was built mainly by armed forces, with a high financial and human cost, assuming an aggressive intervention in the natural landscape. It could be said that this road is considered a symbol that refers to a recent historical period that has been key in the current identity configuration of the country.

In the exhibition, the Transfăgărășan is used as a means/way of approaching a place and a territory. The photographs shown are vectors where the different aspects involved in the act of displacement converge: our personal experience, the road as an object and its relationship with the landscape through which it passes.

We are interested in exploring the limits within the rectangular two-dimensionality implicit in the photographic medium. And if we understand that sculpture has to do with space, the experience of going through and traversing a place by mapping it, then it would also have to do with sculpture. In this way, we have redirected our gaze to this curvy site as if we were trying to solve a complex sculptural equation by moving through it. We let ourselves be carried away by the suggestive forms that constitute this very peculiar landscape and then gather all these elements in a group of photographs with which we can combine our contained spatial perception through the formal reductionism that is typical of the photographic medium.

18/19/2013 project analyses the 201st anniversary of the Battle of the Nations (Leipzig, Germany, from 16 to 19 of October 1813) from three different chronological and conceptual perspectives: 1813, 1913 and 2013. Each of these years forms a separate part of the exhibition; and all have been treated in a different way. More than the Battle of the Nations itself, what I am interested in are its different readings and the different ways in which the memory of the Battle was treated at each centenary.

18/19/2013

1813 / The icon

As far as the objects from 1813 are concerned, we have used only those displayed in museums. Following the museums' model, the exhibition presents historical relics which allow us to place the battle in a context without recounting it directly. To do so, I printed six models of posters to take away, showing the halls dedicated to the Battle in the national museums of the countries which participated on it (Sweden, France, Prussia, Austria, Poland and Russia). On them, one can see how the same historical fact is represented differently in each of these countries. Another important part of the iconic perspective is the relic, I found interesting how the Napoleon Bonaparte's horse, "Le Vizir" remains stuffed in the Army Museum of Paris, where one can also find Bonaparte's coat and hat. These are the icons which tell us about Napoleon Bonaparte without showing his figure directly; the presence of the absent, together with his tomb, located in the same museum.

1913 / The symbolic aspect

In 1913, the Monument to the Battle of the Nations was erected in Leipzig, and it was at that time the largest monument in Europe. It hardly makes any reference to the Battle of 1813; instead the Monument contains symbols glorifying the Battle as one which gave rise to Germany's unification and to "Germany", e.g. figures which represent Emperor Frederick Barbarossa or sculptures of Teutonic warriors around a crypt within the monument in which you can read GOTT MIT UNS (God with us), a text placed at the entrance to the monument which I highlight due to its impact as a slogan.

2013 / The Real

In order to commemorate its 200th anniversary, the Battle of the Nations was recreated in Leipzig. The scene involved more than 6000 members of history associations all around Europe and it was watched by 35000 spectators. This simulation of the Battle becomes reality, as this is the "battle" at which I could personally be present; otherwise, I could only come closer to the original through the relics collected in the museums. What turns out to be interesting is the way in which the hundredth anniversaries were celebrated in the different eras: in 1913, with a gigantic monument dedicated to the German nation and to death, and in 2013, with an immaterial representation dedicated, according to what the speaker said, to peace. From the battle I could get a replica of a light cavalry sabre, AN XI (Klingenthal 1813) model, which took part in the reconstruction of the Battle. The sabre is a contemporary relic: similar to those in the museums, yet of today.

2013

Portraitist of Napoleon Bonaparte, 2013.

This Napoleon is a Parisian lawyer who was Europe's official Napoleon. On my own experience, he is more "real" Napoleon Bonaparte than the "original" one, of whom there are only relics/icons left: a hat, a coat, a tomb.

Bilbaoarte (Spain), 2014

The name and motif for the project (Bratstvo / Jedinstvo) come from the “Brotherhood and Unity Highway”, built in the Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to connect, with its 1180 kilometres, the six regions that formed the federation, its name is referring to the Yugoslav national motto. From the border with Austria, this highway passes Ljubljana, Zagreb, Belgrade and Skopje as far as the frontier with Greece in the southeast. It was the first and only modern highway in the country.

Using the highway as a way of approaching the territory through the experience as an author on a road trip, in Bratstvo / Jedinstvo the old Yugoslavia is narrated from the personal encounter with the latent reality of the country found in the current states that used to form Yugoslavia.

This on-site experience is complemented by a parallel work of research thanks to which a diversity of archival materials have been collected that bring-to-present the past and the current Yugoslavia: a country that, although it does not exist politically, is still present in the imaginary collective of the region.

Photograph from the book Bratstvo Jedinstvo, Sector E-94 / E-5. Belgrade, 1976.
VOZILA ZASTAVA: drive Zastava.

Tjentište monument (Bosnia and Herzegovina), 2015.
Color photography 35 mm.

Found photograph (Croatia), 2015.
Original on photographic paper scanned and edited.

Tjentište monument (Bosnia and Herzegovina), 2015.
Color photography 35 mm.

Found photograph (Croatia), 2015.
Original on photographic paper scanned and edited.

Ilinden monument (North Macedonia), 2015.
35mm black and white photography

Exhibition in Sala Rekalde (Spain), 2016 and in Sala Torrene (Spain), 2017

An experimental platform for interdisciplinary garden projects.

1. #landscapearchitecture @bilbao, 2016

The project started with a walk through Bilbao's anarchic, impromptu gardens that are in the process of disappearing. Coming into existence during the city's most industrial period, these spaces were, and continue to be, places of resistance and refuge on Bilbao's mountainous and post-industrial landscape. We will visit the neighbourhood of Bolueta on the outskirts of Bilbao, an area whose transformation is in full swing.

2. Cortaderia selloana @bilbaoarte, 2017

The invading plant Cortaderia selloana arrived in Spain at the end of 1940s, right in the post-war context. The lack of food and the exclusion of Spain from the UN forced the country to import products from Argentina, one among very few countries that recognized Franco's government. The seeds seemed to be mixed with the wheat that was sent in. The species was already described in the 50's in some fields close to the port of Santander. As of the work with these invading plants, the points of view have been expanded during the development of the project, laying out a new look on the self-representation of globalization and the neocolonial cultural processes that have taken place along the contemporary history (dialectics between nature and humanity), and the back-and-forth consequences occurring from these.

3. #fluggarten @kitzscher, 2018

#fluggarten @kitzscher is a construction of a xeriscape garden consisting of neophyte plant species chosen from the recognition and study of naturalized plants in the Kitzscher area during Home Sick Home festival, taking into account their history and origin in relation to garden beautification. The selection is based on the species rooted in this ecosystem and they could be considered, in most cases, as typical of this landscape, but which originally come from territories strongly affected by the colonization of the European empires. In this sense, the case of invasive plants can be observed as an example of our own world, where the human tries to take control of the environment, and the invasive plants represent the entropy of the supposedly controlled systems. A there-and-back effect where aspects of economic or geopolitical expansionism have resulted in environmental paradoxes through which the colonizing countries have been invaded by fauna and flora from the colonized countries.

Fallopia japonica, Leipzig (Germany)

The exhibition of the project included a publication, displayed on the house of a garden dedicated to Solidago canadensis, and a guided tour through Kitzscher with a view of invasive plants with geoecologist Sonja Knapp from the Helmholtz Center for Environmental Research Leipzig.

The publication was made with the scanned images made on the night on August 6, 2018 of the plant of the species Fallopia japonica located at: 51°20'51.5"N 12°19'41.1"E.

The election of this plant is because it probably first grazed in Germany in 1872 from the site of an abandoned garden centre situated in that region.

The objective of the Ararat / Ağrı Dağı [Armenian / Turkish] project is to travel across the countries situated around Mount Ararat creating series of photographic works and a collection of memorabilia focused on showing the mountain as a real, symbolic and iconic element.

Not only is the symbolic value of the Mountain for the Christian and Islamic religions remarkable, so is its use as the icon of Armenia (although the mountain is in Turkey). As the result of this use, it is possible to find iconography of the mountain all around Armenia and in the Armenian diaspora communities. It is one of the few examples of this nature in the world and can be compared with the representation of the Mountain Fuji in Japan.

Because of the political complexity of this project, the aim is to create neutral portrayals of the mountain using points of view that allows the public to question the political issues. In this sense, besides of showing the icon and symbol, the project shows the Ararat as it is physically: a volcano formed from lava flows and ejections of pyroclastic materials.

Scanned stones from Ararat / Ağrı Dağı from 39°55'26.5"N 44°12'33.3"E, 2018

Armenia

Turkey

Tigranashen / Kərki (a village that is de jure an exclave of the Republic of Azerbaijan, but de facto it is under the occupation of Armenia)

Iran

2.000 ₮
KR

Views of Mount Ararat from morning to dusk through the seasons, 2014

Hic et Nunc was realized thanks to the cooperation of the following artists: Gili Avissar, Marc Bauer, Daniel Gustav Cramer, Nick Crowe, Markus Daum, Hannes Egger, Amit Goffer, Leah Gordon, Alexej Meschtschanow, Marlies Pekarek, Alexandra Vogt.

The creation of the project was specific to the Dreifaltigkeitskirche of Konstanz (Germany). A church belonging to a monastery built in 1268 where a congregation of Augustinian hermits was established within the walls of the city near the shore of Lake Constance. King Sigismund was a guest of the monastery between 1417 and 1418 during the Council of Constance, as a way of thanking the monastery the king donated frescoes for the interior of the church. In the frescoes the council is represented with the king and other participants of the Council. The catholic church of Dreifaltigkeitskirche is one of the most important religious monuments of the city and one of the icons of Constance.

Hic et Nunc [Latin: Here and Now] is a collection put together by the author. It consists of the photo-documentation of the trips of the artists participating in the Meeting Point exhibition in Constanza (Germany) and Kreuzlingen (Switzerland).

600 years ago, delegates from all over Christendom travelled to the Council of Constance on foot, on horseback, by carriage or by boat. The trip was slow, uncomfortable and sometimes dangerous. Today we can travel across the Alps in a few hours without much effort and we can easily reach our destination by plane. In Hic et Nunc, all artists participating in the Meeting Point exhibition were asked to document their trip to Konstanz through disposable cameras. The artists made their trips to the city and also illustrated it. These cameras were processed in Konstanz and installed on Bible-bearing tables inside the Dreifaltigkeitskirche church as a photographic archive of distant places, but all taken with the same destination.

In addition, throughout the city, a selection of those photographs was displayed, arranged in windows and glass doors to create a second tour, apart from the main one, with the inputs of the invited artists.

Installation of the photo made by Gili Avissar

Daniel Gustav Cramer

Alexandra Vogt

Installation of the photo made by Alexandra Vogt

Mee t / 8
Po nt

Eriz Moreno Aranguren

Leah Gordon

* in cooperation with Constanze Müller

Boundaries of Europe is a series of publications that explores - through research - the geographic, political and cultural boundaries of the different territories of the European border; with a specific focus on the territories with a culture not well known to the majority of the inhabitants in Western Europe.

The publication is a “snapshot” of the culture and society of the territories chosen at a given time, each journal consists of a collection of material both taken by the authors and obtained after researching files and/or interviews with key people in the contemporary cultural scene of each territory (with a special interest in the visual arts, politics and society), due to their role as “seismographs” and representatives of the reflective observation of society and creative thinking.

The approach to each place is done without wanting to establish an external vision to it, but with the intention of collecting local perspectives through meetings and interviews. From these connections, the objective of each publication is to describe a deeper perspective by documenting each of the participants' experiences through the inputs they contribute (images, texts and objects). In this sense, the interviews are the best way to get an idea of the background, the perspective, and hopes and dreams the people of these countries have and share, as well as the understanding of how they see Europe and the relations with their identity.

The series of publications began with #Armenia, created by the artist Eriz Moreno Aranguren and the art communicator Constanze Müller. It offers an artistic approach leading to a deeper understanding of the internal perspective of territories on the borders of Europe.

#Armenia, 2015
100 pages
A5

English
ISBN: 978-84-606-9025-2

Pages 2 / 3

Pages 14 / 15

Pages 20 / 21

Pages 24 / 25

Pages 28 / 29

Christiane Molteni: You are a member of Art Lab [1] and also a painter. Is this work connected?

Artur Petersson: Yes, of course. It works like in two ways. From one hand, when I am alone I am working as Art the painter or the anarchist or something like this... I mean... in my activities in Art Lab those words also have connections to my paintings. When I am working in Art Lab it's connected, because from one hand, when you are watching discussions, maybe you can find some political points. It has its connections, because my head is full with things, which are surrounding me. So it's connected.

I mean, there are some differences, of course. When you are in your studio and you are alone doing something with oil and canvas in general, there are not so many differences, because I am the same person with the same ideas.

GM: That's right. It seems to have no connection between the two forms of your artistic work in Art Lab?

AP: The connections are always mixed, in my head. I mean, it's not like when you are doing something separate with oil and canvas. You are always reading papers... maybe you are just reading them... just normal, what you want to do. You are doing them, and you are writing your thoughts, but actually you are the anarchist, you are the activist, you are the painter, you are planning your life... it's something on the levels... I don't know, against capitalism, against government, against violence... I am trying to put this energy into my canvases. So, the connection is not so deep, but there is this connection. It just has another level or another face (laughing).

GM: Your artwork's subject matter seems to be more expressed in your approach to your artwork.

AP: Of course, on the paintings, on the canvas, you are working actively with your energy and with your emotions. And, of course, in interaction you imagine some pictures or some really basic references... just writing about the basic feeling or the same energy, I think the closest thing the energy is... something that you should feel. And of course, [there can be] biological signals and descriptions which can help [to] get inspiration when they are reacting about action.

I mean, now I am speaking like the person who is doing these pictures, so I am trying to get this energy on these pictures. But of course, you are right, there are many feelings which are different, maybe personally yours, but lets stick with me, not being like... a painter. He [the artist] is different, maybe with his own feelings, maybe with his own needs... like Max Meldrum, something... I mean, I am talking about feelings and pictures. So I am trying to see this two ways of life. In? Between action, activism, can do... can do... can do... can do... can do... police and on the same time, when I am at home, I can paint, can paint, and I should say that it is not so difficult, when you are one of these people involved in this and this... it's not difficult. I mean, if I would talk, probably you will understand. If you are a painter, you should not be normal and paint, but me, I am not changed. I mean, now it's more personal.

GM: Are you married to Art Lab?

AP: In Art Lab, all of us are artists. There are seven people. For example, Harald Jansson, he is a good painter, he writes about art, but at the same time he is also creating. He is not like a person who is just talking. Which is also very important. Actually in America we have a big problem of real good condition of art. There are not so many people who are doing it properly, it's very... but it is a good quality.

GM: Most of your visitors are very educated junior students. From what perspective do you do it?

AP: I don't think that there are so many differences between art and politics. I mean, it is more a matter of choices and a matter of imagination. "What we had, or even which we have now" - that politics and art are really two different worlds. But it is not. I mean, of course there is a difference, which everybody can see. But what is the difference? If you are an artist, for example, let's imagine any artist you want, for example, Modigliani, van Gogh, anyone... whatever you got your ideas from landscape or from nature or from the people... what is the difference? For example from our point, we start not work from politics. If you are interested in politics, art and if you are an active citizen of your country, you can work with politics in a very interesting way. And even in a creative way.

For Art Lab it is a political exhibition, but we are working probably after the end of 2007 - it was because something really natural. You haven't any problems with your society, your government. Even at first we had no any problem. Our second exhibition was called "The Return" and it was about these tragic events, which we had been. It was something like which is going on in Ukraine, Moscow [2], but it concerned the government, who are now these terrible people. After we had a kind of "Meeting in Open Spaces. The 1st of March" [2012] [2] there came there with army units and bodyguards and beat people and also killed people. Ten people were killed, hundreds were arrested. And our exhibition was the first, which was dedicated to these events. So it was our first try to have a direct political exhibition. I mean, you couldn't mix it with any other point, because it was called "The Return". And this was exhibited stuff. Not the voices, actions, comments, installations... was clear political art.

GM: Would you say that every artist is somehow political, even though he is just painting landscapes?

AP: In general, of course yes. At least now in this century it's easy. But I am sure even before. For example as you said, artists, who were just staying on landscape paintings... let's say van Gogh. All his life was struggle. And struggle also against uniqueness. You can say that there is no position, you can say that his whole energy against uniqueness. You can say that they are trying to make themselves more than the others. And it's also in this time, you know it's even stronger. So, I would say, even if you're not dealing with politics, politics are dealing with you. Of course, you can say, I am not a political man or woman, I have no connection with it, but I think, somehow, the art is to avoid the truth.

GM: Would you say that artists, from Armenia, should be more directly political, because of the situation?

AP: Should be? I would be glad about it.

GM: Why?

AP: Because of the situation, that exists here now. I mean, there are too many problems, and there are not so many artists which are ready to fight against them. I don't know if you know them or not, but we have here also a big level of artists or people who are considered to be artists. But these are exactly the artists - I was thinking about a famous guy - who is thinking that they have no connections with politics. They are just painting some beautiful paintings and taking them to the exhibition hall... as you know, we still have

10 April 2014

Conflict between Armenia and Azerbaijan:
<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1210740/> [Visited 13.10.2022]
<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC1210740/> [Visited 13.10.2022]

[X] Armenian Patriarchate of Jerusalem 2001-2010:
[X] Classification of Biology Teacher from the Department of Biology of the Yerevan State University 1982-1983: / Researcher studies in the Yerevan State University.
1983-1985: / Researcher studies in the Yerevan State University.
1986-1987: / Biology teacher, school No. 183 of Yerevan.
1988-1989: / Adviser of the Armenian Society of cultural ties and cooperation with foreign countries, senior editor, head of department, secretary-in-charge, first deputy chairman of the board, secretariat chairman.
2004-2008: / Minister of Culture and Youth Affairs.
2008-2011: / Minister of Culture.
2010: / He resigned due to the loss of Minister of Culture.
2010: / Before he was asked May 8, 2010 to re-appoint her to Minister of Culture.
Armenian Government.

Rants and decompositions: Republic of Armenia Prime Minister's commemorative medal, CII diploma, Mezus International medal, 10th Anniversary of Writer Studio for Cooperation, French Republic Knight of Arts Order, Fellow Member, Council of Europe, Honorary of Science Professor for international cooperation, Award of the Ministry of Science and Higher Education of the Russian Federation, Honorary of the Russian Academy of Sciences, also reported natural programs, international scientific conferences, founded "Gating of Cultural Information center". She is author of many scientific, pedagogical, methodic articles and a number of books and periodicals, including the Russian-language "Pilot" magazine, English language "Journalism Today" series, software cultural reference publications. She authored "Global Press Media" and "Armenia Arts" Extension courses about Armenian books.

Maria Grigoryan (Grigorian), with her son and her grandfather.

Information found in the official website of the Government of the Republic of Armenia:

<https://www.gov.am/news/gov-members/>
[X] Serial European Parliamentarian, Ambassador 1996, Secretary General Karabakh Republic 1994-1996: / Chairman of the National Assembly of the Republic of Armenia. He was subsequently elected to the Supreme Council of Armenia. He served as a member of the National Assembly of Armenia and is considered to be one of the founders of Armenia's armed forces.

1991-1996: / Minister of Defense of the Republic of Armenia.
1995-1996: / Head of the Republic of Armenia State Security Department and, later, Minister of National Security.

1996-1998: / Chief of Staff for the Republic of Armenia President Robert Kocharyan.

1998-2000: / Secretary of the Republic of Armenia National Security Council set by the President.

2000-2002: / Defence Minister of the Republic of Armenia.

4 April 2002: / Appointed as the Prime Minister of the Republic of Armenia.

10 February 2003-2003: / Served as the first President of the Republic of Armenia.

Same person was connected to the translation, who obtained Saryanov (see the resolution).

Information found in the official website of the President of the Republic of Armenia:

<https://news.president.am/en/article/saryanov/>

[X] Observers from the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe OSCE: on Saturday afternoon the credibility of the initial results of Armenian presidential elections, saying that President Serzh Sargsyan benefited from "unusually high" voter turnout recorded in many districts.

The OSCE election observers said that they had been able to verify the results of the election and the number of votes for the incumbents ... This makes concerns regarding confidence [about] the integrity of the electoral process", it said in a post-election mission report.

Citing the final results released by the Central Election Commission (CEC), the mission noted that more than 80 percent of eligible voters attended on Sunday in 144 of the nearly 2,000 polling stations across Armenia. Turnout got over 80 percent in 130 of them, according to the CEC.

<https://www.osce.org/cecc/249781.html>

[X] Boris "Bax", Classified in 2007: "Historical-vocal ensemble": is a Russian street-art group known for their provocative and politically charged works of performance art. The group has had more than 1000 members, including famous and current students of the Moscow-based Moscow School of Management, Moscow State University, and University of Tsinghua, Beijing. The group does not have a fixed base or permanent members, and it was supported by some Russian tycoons or government.

[X] Patri Pali founded in 2011: <https://patri.ru/organization/> is a Russian-themed platform.

under press based in Moscow. The group stages unauthorized provocative guerrilla performances in public places, events are aimed at mass media and passers-by (the incident 04-08-2011 were posted on YouTube/PatriOffical). The collective's typical themes include terrorism, LGBT rights, and opposition to Russian President Vladimir Putin, whose the group considers a dictator and to KGB agent. The members of the Russian Orthodox Church, Belarusian members of Pussy Riot, former members of the National and Orthodox Patriarchate, some members of Russia.

[X] Jens-Peter Künast (Künast-Künast): 1938:
Leader of the left-wing radical party in Germany, parliamentarian had occupied a top office of the Council of Finance, Parliamentary Assembly (PACE) of pro-government lists after winning him to discuss the political situation in the country. PACE's American Service reports.

Former German Foreign Minister, member of the Social Democratic Party (SPD) (2002-2005) and the Green Party (2005-2009). From July 2005, a member of the PACE, an expert on Armenia-Kurdistan conflict, he concerns about the forthcoming parliamentary elections and human rights abuses, frequent visits to Yerevan to discuss preparations for the May elections and to assess the American authorities' compliance with a PACE resolution adopted last October.

The resolution urged the authorities to hold "genuinely democratic parliamentary elections", return the May 2009 election results and "cancel the 2010 election if they do not meet international standards for freedom of expression". A month of the deadly 2009 events evidence in Yerevan after those elections, https://www.refid.org/conten/ferencsak_reaktion_csoport.html, https://www.refid.org/conten/ferencsak_reaktion_csoport.html.

[X] PEACE TO THE PEOPLE, WAR TO THE AUTHORITIES:

[X] Detention in front of the Russian Embassy in Yerevan (Armenia) against Russian intervention during the 2014 Crimean crisis, 5 March 2014:
[X] 2014:

[X] Detention in front of the Russian Embassy in Yerevan (Armenia) against Russian intervention during the 2014 Crimean crisis, 5 March 2014:

The HEY_HEY_HEY! editorial project was an activator of ideas through experiences about what is possible, the politics and the illusion. A project designed to learn together to establish new questions that can move sensibilities from contemporary creation.

#8 is the last number printed by the association Hey, Hey, Hey! Approaches to the city before its closure, in it we dealt with the closure of the association by printing all our failed projects: all those projects that we worked on but were never completed.

HEYHEYHEY! #8, 2014
100 pages
A5

English
ISBN: 978-84-939392-1-2

It is possible to conclude that if from one perspective the assertion that poetic language is a particular case of natural language is well-founded, then from another perspective the view that natural language is also considered a particular case of poetic language is just as convincing. 'Poetic language' and 'natural language' are particular manifestations of more general systems that are in a state of continual tension and mutual translation, and at the same time are not wholly mutually translatable; therefore the question of the primacy of one or the other communication-modelling system is determined by the functional direction of a specific act of translation, that is, by what is translated into what.

Charles Fourier (1772–1837), who was born into one of Besançon's oldest merchant families, drew upon his travelling salesman's experience to develop a social reform project. Appalled by the inequality he saw around him, Fourier wanted to set up a harmonious society where men followed their passions, achieving perfect happiness by virtue of a law he considered the counterpart of one that Newton had discovered: universal passionate attraction. Fourier first sketched out his thought system in 'Traité des quatre mouvements et des destinées générales', which was anonymously published in Lyon using the fake address of Leipzig in 1808.

Pocos saben que los griegos, que inventaron muchas artes, inventaron también el arte de la memoria, y que, al igual que las otras artes, pasó a Roma, de donde descendió a la tradición europea. Este arte consiste a memorizar voluntosamente una técnica mediante la cual se imprimen en la memoria lugares e imágenes. Por lo común se ha clasificado como mnemotécnica, capítulo de la actividad humana que en los tiempos modernos carece más bien de importancia. Pero en la época anterior a la impresión, el adiestramiento de la memoria era de extraordinaria importancia; por otro lado, la manipulación de imágenes en la memoria involucra en cierta medida a la pupila como un todo.

Zoología. Molluscos. José L. Díaz. 4°

53° 34' N
53" 39" E

